Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball

First Latino and First Female TV Producers

DESI: 1917–1986, LUCILLE: 1911–1989

One of the most famous couples in TV history was also a titanic team of fearless firsts. Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball were pioneers on and off the screen.

Desi Arnaz was born in Cuba. His family moved to Miami in the 1930s, and as a singer and bandleader, he helped make Cuban and Latin music popular in the United States. In 1940, Desi was in a movie called Too Many Girls, where he met and married a young actor named Lucille Ball. She had appeared in dozens of movies, singing, dancing, and showing a unique talent for comedy. Lucille became a big star in the 1940s, and Desi continued touring with his band.

Desi's outgoing personality led to his first "first." He hosted the 1950 TV game show Your Tropical Trip, which made him the first Latino to star in his own program. TV networks also wanted Lucille to do a show, but she would only do it if Desi could be her costar. Together, they created I Love Lucy, about a Cuban bandleader and his wife.

The show's first episode went on the air on October 15, 1951, and became a huge hit. It ran for seven years and remains one of TV's most popular comedies of all time.

I Love Lucy was pioneering in other ways. As producer of the show, Desi was the first to use a live audience for a TV comedy and the first to have three cameras filming at once. Hundreds of TV comedies have been done that way since. The show was also the first to be shown as reruns. Finally, I Love Lucy was one of the first shows made in Hollywood. At the time, most TV shows were filmed in New York City, but Desi and Lucille lived in Los Angeles, so they made sure the show was filmed near them instead.

Desi and Lucille also teamed up in the business world, creating Desilu Productions to make shows, including The Andy Griffith Show and The Dick Van Dyke Show.

The couple divorced in 1960 but remained friends and business partners for a time. In 1962, Desi left the company, and Lucille became the first woman to be president of a TV studio! Under Lucille's creative leadership, Desilu made hits out of the Star Trek and Mission: Impossible franchises.

Desi and Lucille transformed television in America. Every sitcom and every rerun you watch can be traced to these small-screen pioneers.
