DISCUSSION GUIDE

1. Danica is a people pleaser, and she hates conflict. How would you have handled her issues with her grandmother?
2. Titus tends to be emotionally needy, and he fears nobody will ever love him, due to past dating disasters. Do you think he'll eventually heal from that once he's settled in a stable relationship? Why or why not?
3. Families can be complicated. When it comes out how terrible a certain relative is in Witch Please, readers might be surprised that Gram wasn't cut off years ago. Do you think toxic relatives can ever change?
4. Friends play an important role in this story. Who are your besties that you can't live without?
5. If you were a witch, what magical affinity would you like to have? (Technology, illusions, life magic, mind-altering, necromancy, etc)
6. I have to ask. Who would be in your coven?
7. This book deals with bigotry and how it hurts everyone. Have you ever dealt with a situation where someone close to you disapproved of someone else who was important to you? How did you respond?
8. In this story, both Titus and Danica already have firm friendship circles, but it can be tough to meet people as an adult. How can people make new friends once they're grown?
9. Witch Please has some complex family situations, like Titus's dad moving on so fast that it hurts both his kids. How do you feel about the blended family dynamic? Is it possible to make it work or do you prefer finding your own family, creating it yourself with friends you've chosen?
10. Clementine Waterhouse is often thought of as the 'mean' one because she's blunt and logical, and she tends not to pull her punches. She fits the profile of 'unlikable' female protagonist, so let's talk about why female characters have to be sweet, nice, kind, supportive, patient. How do you feel about allegedly unlikable characters?
11. Titus and Danica are soul mates, basically, meant to be together. Do you believe in that concept? Why or why not?
12. Bonus question—Leanne totally hooks up with Trevor in this story. She's a man-eater. He's the chilliest bro ever. Where do you see that going? Enter predictions here!
